THE TWO GRAVES-A GERMAN LEGENR.

BY JOHN G. BAKE.

A man who long had tried in wais
The d ctor's skill to ease the pain
That racked his limbs to case the pain
That racked his limbs to case his gout scarce suffered him to crawl shout.
Though muca inclined to dispair,
Gave car to all who spoke him fair,
And told of means that might neare,
The end he sought—relief or cure.

Among the crowd of such, there came, To proffer help, an ancient dame, Who, having heard with solemn face. The nature of the patient's case, advised him thus: ""At early light, While yet the grass is damp, with night Go, sit upon a good man's grave, And in the dews upon it law.

Next morning at the break of day The cripple takes his weary way Unto the churchyard; where upon a moonment of positished stone. He read with Joy: "Here lies a man Whose living virtues far outrain all words of praise; a model he Of Justice, Goodness, Charity!"

Enough! the patient takes his seat And as the moleture bathes his feet and aching joints; but, south to say, It did not drive his gout away. Though thrice repeated; nay, he swore The pain was greater than before! What next? Near by a hillock lies what next? Near by a mileck less Of grate-grawa carlin; and as he tries. The good dame's prescrip ion once again; and as!—swift firer patient's pain; He drops his staff, and—strange to bell—His gout is gone—the man is well; With grateful heart and beaming tace, He turns the sleeper's name to trace; But, lo! the slab is the alone, With mil a well muon the stone!
